Main street tears into sign bylaw

GREG HOEKSTRA
Staff Reporter

Haliburton merchants sent a strong message to Dysart councillors last week, arguing that a ban on sandwich board signs would hurt local businesses.

Last Monday, the municipality held its first public meeting on its new draft sign bylaw, which would prohibit the use of portable signs – such as sandwich board or 'A-frame' signs – in Haliburton's downtown core. The bylaw would also forbid flashing signs and free-standing signs within town limits, and would regulate how much signage businesses can display in their store-front windows.

At the outset of the meeting, Councillor Derek Knowles said the proposed ban on sandwich boards was an attempt to make Haliburton's sidewalks more pedestrian-friendly.

"The intent is to make the sidewalks as accessible as possible," said Knowles. "Sandwich boards are getting out of control. They are all over the place and they add very little to the community."

But despite Knowles' senti-

'There's a bear in my kitchen'

For the past 71 years, John Southcombe has made the trek from Cincinnati to his cottage on Lake Kashagawigamog to relax and unwind for the summer months. And by the time he arrives and unpacks he's understandably tired and hungry. This year there was a bit of a twist to his arrival.

Yesterday was hot and humid and because he'd just arrived, the cottage was stifling. So Southcombe opened the single cottage door to let a breeze through. He finished unpacking and made for the kitchen to fix himself a peanut butter and banana sandwich.

At about 10:30 a.m. he decided to have a nap and lay down in the bedroom not far from the kitchen. As he dozed off he was soon awoken by noises coming from the kitchen.

"I looked up and saw this big black dog in my kitchen," said Southcombe.

Confused as to why a dog would be in his kitchen he rose to investigate. As he reached the kitchen window he peered out to see a black bear, approximately three feet tall, weighing an estimated 200 lbs, sitting by a tree trying to open his jar of peanut butter with little success.

"I was shocked," said Southcombe after realizing a bear had just been in his kitchen.

He immediately called his friend Bill Davis, who then called the OPP. When the OPP

Water levels panel holds public meetings

The panel on the future of the Trent-Severn Waterway has scheduled 16 public meetings in the communities along the waterway corridor over the summer months.

The independent panel has been appointed to evaluate the waterway's future, how to protect and present its cultural heritage, how to protect the natural environment, how it can contribute to the recreational needs of Canadians and visitors, the role of renewable energy, a water management regime, and a sustainable funding framework.

At the meetings, individuals and organizations can make public presentations with ideas to address the opportunities, challenges and issues facing the waterway system. Anyone who wants to make a public presentation must reserve a time slot and submit a written copy (or brief summary) of the content to the panel office in advance.

The first meeting will be held in Bobcaygeon on July 3, and the public consultation phase of the panel's process will end in Lakefield on September 13, 2007.

The meeting schedule is: Bobcaygeon – July 3; Peterborough – July 4; Port Perry – July 5; Trenton – July 24; Campbellford – July 25; Bolsover – July 26; Haliburton – July 28; Port Severn – Aug. 7; Orillia –

The heavy rainfall on June 8 has had an impact on local lake water levels. Dave Ness, a Water Control Engineer for the Trent-Severn Waterway, says the Highlands got approximately two weeks' worth of rain in two hours during the June 8 rainfall. Here the overflow of water is seen at the sides of the Gooderham dam.

Aug. 8; Lindsay – Aug. 9; Minden – Aug. 14; Hastings – Aug. 15; Fenelon Falls – Aug. 16; Keswick – Sept. 11; Barrie – Sept. 12; Lakefield – Sept. 13

Locations and times will be posted on the website at www.tswpanel.ca as soon as they are established

Detailed information about the process and submission requirements are also posted on the site. Anyone who would like to make a submission can make a public presentation, make a written submission, or do both. The deadline for written submissions is September 30.

arrived the bear had successfully opened the jar and was trying to dip his paw into the jar.

Southcombe said that the OPP decided to shoot the bear with a taser gun to get him on the move and the shot definitely sent the bear running with the OPP in tow. The bear eventually disappeared into the woods. Southcombe said the OPP's main concern during the incident was the whereabouts of the bear's mother.

Though Southcombe said he has seen bears in the past – his last recollection was four or five years ago – this encounter of a close kind was a first and, he hopes, the last for him.

Getting healthy one pedal at a time

Busy mom copes with stress and weight gain on the seat of a bicycle

LAURA HENDRICK

Staff Reporter

The main reason that Andrea Hagarty hops on her bike each day is to shed the stress of a hectic lifestyle. It doesn't hurt that the habit has also helped her shed 70 pounds of baby weight.

Having gone through years of broken fitness promises, Hagarty knows how difficult it is to make the shift from dreading exercise to craving it. Ten years ago, she bought a $1,500 bike, hoping that top of the line equipment could inspire her to get active.

"I think I rode it three times that summer, then I got pregnant with my son," she recalls with a laugh.

Even in the throes of motherhood, Hagarty tried to keep her resolution alive by installing a baby seat on the bike. And when her family temporarily relocated to Antigua, she had it boxed and flown over. Unfortunately, none of these efforts were enough to motivate her to ride.

For years the bike stayed in the box and Hagarty's weight began to climb. The birth of her second child, Macy, brought her up to 220 pounds.

Work was also providing its share of pressure. She and her husband Monte Miscio own the Bonnie View Inn on South Kashawigamog. Taking care of the inn as well as her family allowed fitness to tumble down her list of priorities.

"I was so stressed all the time at work," she says. "Then someone mentioned that I should try biking"

With that nudge, the bike was given a second chance. Throughout the spring of 2004 Hagarty took daily seven-kilometre rides into town with her daughter Macy to grab a meal outside Todd's Your Independent Grocers. "By fall I was biking everywhere," she says.

Hagarty noticed her weight dropping within the first four months of biking, eventually hitting 150 pounds. She also noticed her mood improving. "I'm so much more relaxed," she says.

With bright blue eyes, blonde curls and a friendly smile, even the hands of time seem to have relaxed for Hagarty. Despite being a 34-year-old mother of two, she has the cheer and glow of a college student. She bounces off her chair as she talks about her cycling and whips out a blue-camouflaged iPod when describing her motivational secret: hip hop music.

When she's not biking to fitness classes in Haliburton, she completes a 50-minute route that stretches from the inn on Kashawigamog Road to Old Donald Road and eventually County Road 18. The scenic route takes her by monarch butterflies, deer, and recently a slow-witted wild turkey that knocked her off her wheels.

"There was blood everywhere," she says of the collision. "I flew."

These days she is fully recovered and hoping to pass her love of cycling on to other women. For those who are interested in becoming more active but have long since given up cycling, an upcoming workshop could be a turning point.

The Haliburton, Kawartha, Pine Ridge District Health Unit is encouraging more local residents to get back on their bikes through a Get in Gear workshop on Tuesday, June 19. The event begins at 6:30 p.m. at the town docks in Haliburton. It is aimed at reconnecting adults with their bikes.

The workshop will be just one part of Haliburton's second annual cycling festival that runs from June 18 to June 23. Events like a bicycle treasure hunt and a bike parade will provide other opportunities to get pedaling.

The Get in Gear workshop should bring some pleasant surprises for former cyclists, says Sue Shikaze, chair of Communities in Action. "For people who haven't been on a bike in a long time, there's a lot that has changed to make it more comfortable," she says, remembering the poorly designed seats that once made riding painful.

Above all, she says, the workshop will ensure that people have the skill and confidence to ride safely.

A renewed interest in biking is good news for Glen Sharpley, owner of Sharpley Source for Sports. In addition to his usual trail-riding crowd, he said has seen a growing number of customers looking to cycling as a mode of transportation and weight loss. "We're definitely selling more road bikes," he said.

For those interested in buying a new bike, or rediscovering one that has been collecting cobwebs, Hagarty has a few tips: pick out a great route, your favourite music, and maybe a even a few houses you can stop at when you're in a pinch.

"I've pulled into people's houses to ask for water, a washroom, and Kleenex," she says with a smile. "People are so friendly."

Businesses say they rely on sandwich board signs

ments, many local business owners weren't buying in to the proposal – particularly those located off Highland Street.

"We have a lot of tourists in the summer, but they walk up and down the main street and if they don't see what they want, then they're gone," said Norm Perrott owner of Outdoors Plus, located along York Street.

"There are people coming into our store everyday in the summer saying 'If you didn't have that sign out there, we wouldn't have known you existed.' I'd bet we wouldn't get half the amount of business if we didn't have that [sandwich] sign by the CIBC."

Perrott went on to express his anger that council was even considering such restrictions, given that it could have such a large impact on many people's lives.

"We live in a community where a lot of the small businesses count on making money from May to November. We don't need to be shut down...We don't need you to be kicking us in the face, telling us we can't do this. This is a very big thing for every one of us who owns a business in town," he said.

Similar concerns were expressed by Andy Glecoff, who owns and operates Haliburton's V&S department store. Unlike Outdoors Plus, Glecoff's business is located along the main street. Yet even he speculates that a ban on portable signs would be devastating for his business.

"I think it's important for council to realize this is a very unprofitable place to do business," Glecoff said. "As merchants, we try to do as much as we can to bring as many people into our businesses...and that is for our own survival."

Glecoff agreed that council should regulate signage, in order to ensure the downtown core does not become an eyesore, but he noted that other towns and cities have achieved this by placing restrictions on sign placement and size, rather than imposing an outright ban.

"I just think you have to be more sympathetic to what merchants go through, because Haliburton is not a gold mine, and it hasn't been for a number of years," he said.

Suzanne Paavola, new owner of the Magic Touch Day Spa, said the proof is in the pudding when it comes to sandwich boards and their effectiveness. Paavola said she just recently put out a sandwich board sign to let potential customers know that her business is located on the lower level of the Stedman's Mall. Week after week she has seen that sign generate new customers and clients.

Jim Henwood, owner of Henwood's Variety on Highland Street, questioned council's intentions and whether sandwich board signs are actually a significant obstacle for pedestrians.

"If the signs are tucked right against the building, I really don't see a problem there," he said, adding that his sandwich sign – which advertises weekly lottery jackpots – sticks out less on the sidewalk than some of the porches on neighbouring buildings.

He said the planters were more of an impediment than the signs.

During much of the meeting Dysart councillors remained silent, allowing those in attendance to voice their opinions. Once all those in attendance had spoken, Councillor Steve Pogue, who chaired the public meeting, reiterated that the bylaw is still in its early stages and that comments from last week's meeting will be brought back to the council table.

"We're getting the message that sandwich board signs should be allowed, and we as a council are going to review that. But I think the message we're also hearing is that there should be regulations put around those signs regarding how they look and where they can be placed."

Knowles made similar comments but noted that there is more to the issue than just sandwich board signs, which is why the municipality is re-examining a sign bylaw for the first time since 1984.

"The most controversial thing that has happened in the past few months is that drug store sign," he said, "and if they were here right now I would tell them. That sign should never have happened."

Councillor Andrea Roberts is also unhappy with the signage at the new Rexall location, which is why she feels a strong sign bylaw is such an important tool. The township would have much more control over the look, size, and make of new businesses' signs.

"The signage on the Rexall disappoints me. I think it's too big and too bright," said Roberts. "But big corporations will adhere to good bylaws, because they must adhere."

Robert den Boer, owner of den Boer Signs, confirmed for council that a strong bylaw could have given them the authority to regulate Rexall's signage. Instead, since there was no bylaw on the books, den Boer says that Rexall was free to use the same large, bright signs that companies tend to use in "big box strip malls" – roughly $70,000 worth of signage.

As a sign maker himself, den Boer said he was supportive of the proposed bylaw, since "sign pollution can give my industry a bad name." That being said, he also cautioned councillors to be mindful of a business's need for signage.

"The bylaw needs to be balanced, because a sign is a business's most important piece of advertising," he said.

den Boer said the proposed ban on all free-standing signs within the village of Haliburton was unnecessary.

"Free-standing signs are both in keeping with the heritage theme and are necessary for many of the businesses in town," den Boer said. "A good example is the Village Barn. No one driving by can see that that building is there until they're already passing it. So they need that free-standing sign there."

Instead, den Boer suggested having a maximum area for signs, and would allow a business to split that area between both fascia and free-standing signs, rather than allowing only one or the other.

Governor General salutes founder of Silver Flutes

MARTHA PERKINS

Editor

As Bill Medland stood on the sidewalk watching the Haliburton Santa Claus Parade pass by, he was dismayed. The floats were fun but a parade just wasn't a parade without a marching band.

He turned to his friend Tom Robinson and said, "Where are your bands?"

Robinson told him that it was too cold to entice any bands from the surrounding areas.

Well then, Medland said, it's time to start a band in Haliburton.

That was November, 1993. By the following February, Medland had found enough uniforms, instruments and young music enthusiasts to form the Highlands Silver Flutes.

Fast forward to June 2, 2007. It was with immense pride that Medland accepted a Caring Canadian Award from Governor General Michaëlle Jean in recognition of the tremendous role he has played in young people's lives.

"Thanks to his leadership and genuine concern for youth, many teenagers in Haliburton have learned to play an instrument," the Governor General said at the ceremony at St. Alban's Boys and Girls Club in Toronto. "They have benefited from the experience of participating in such events as Oktoberfest in Kitchener-Waterloo and the Toronto Santa Claus Parade. Under Mr. Medland's guidance, they have become ambassadors for the county and are celebrated within the province."

Medland says the moment made him proud of the Silver Flutes. "They're the people who won the award, aren't they?"

He was deeply impressed by the Governor General's grace and warmth. "She's a wonderful lady."

Medland, who has been named Highlander of the Year for his commitment to the young people of this county, has been involved in marching bands since his own youth. His connections with other bands helped him gather enough uniforms and instruments to start the Silver Flutes which has had upwards of 30 members. As a result, the young people who march down streets in their brilliant uniforms have not had to pay a single penny to take part in the band.

It's this open access that makes the Silver Flutes so special in so many people's eyes.

"I enjoy doing things for kids who otherwise wouldn't have the opportunity," says Medland, who still leads every Thursday's practice even though he and his wife Donna now live in Port Perry. "I love it. If I retired I'd seize up."

Remembrance of times past

MOST PEOPLE GET GIFTS when they celebrate a special occasion, such as a birthday or anniversary. Kim Emmerson has decided to celebrate his family business's 50th anniversary by giving a present to everyone in Haliburton County.

Included in this week's Echo is The Mill Reserve: A Part of Haliburton History. In this beautifully done 32-page booklet, Emmerson has gathered all of the stories that have been written about a square chunk of land in the middle of Haliburton called the mill reserve. The land was set aside on the original maps of the village because the people who were trying to attract settlers to the shores of Head Lake knew how vital a mill would be.

martha perkins

Imagine arriving here on foot or by horse – there was no train yet – and having to cut, by hand, the trees with which you'd build your house. It would seem an overwhelming task. Building a mill, then, was a gargantuan undertaking. The first efforts were washed away when the banks of the river collapsed and they had to start all over again. No wonder townsfolk were in a celebratory mood when they gathered in December, 1864 to officially open the village's first saw mill. (Although it is a wonder that they didn't want to drink to their success. As a newspaper account of the day delightfully noted, "no intoxicating drinks were consumed on the occasion.")

About two-thirds of the booklet is history that's been compiled and documented by other local historians: Harley Cummings, Nila Reynolds, Ron Curry and Leopoldina Dobrzensky. Only Mrs. Dobrzensky is alive to thank for all the research she did to ensure that give our history the attention it deserves. Imagine how little we'd understand about how blessed we are to live in such a relatively prosperous village were it not for their work. In this week's paper there's an article about how tough it is to have a business in Haliburton.

Emmerson's booklet helps to illustrate the fact that this was never a land of milk and honey. Everyone, from the village's first entrepreneurs to those who catered to the burgeoning cottage industry, have not been able to take success for granted.

Indeed, it didn't bode well for the village that the first major business, the Canadian Land and Emigration Company, went bust. Their dreams of getting rich by selling land to immigrants from the United Kingdom were as inflated as the language they used to try to attract settlers to the Highlands. Put a pitchfork anywhere into the ground in Haliburton County and you hit either rock or swamp, not the fertile farmland that early advertisements of the Highlands boasted of. When the train finally made it to the county, most people used it to leave this godforsaken land. They preferred to try their chances out West than to continue to struggle to try to make a go of it here. (How many of our young people are contemplating a trip out West today to take advantage of the booming economy in Alberta?)

Take the time to read The Mill Reserve. Think of all the people who risked everything they had to make the village of Haliburton prosper. Understand how tremendously difficult it must have been for them. And appreciate how lucky we are that a few of them never gave up hope.

Thanks, Kim, for reminding us how lucky we are to be enjoying the fruits of their labour today.

Talk, talk, talk

I WAS FLIPPING CHANNELS the other night and it occurred to me that we might be just about adequately supplied with sports talk shows. There must be at least a hundred hyper-cafeinated sportifs in full 'sports-jabber' at any time of the day or night, grasping at straws of interest, discussing last night's minutiae of interest, ad nauseum.

"Do you think he threw that elbow on purpose, or did he accidentally stick his elbow in Crashly's ear?"

This just might be the result of having way more sports channels than we have sporting events. I mean, who watches Beach Arena Football for goodness sake? I'm not kidding. I stopped flipping to look at this nonsense and listened to the poor announcer saddened with discussing the finer points of Beach Arena Football with comments like, "Now that was a great play...this is Beach Arena Football at its best!" I decided not to hang around to hear some of the great moments in B.A.F., as it probably will never be known.

Now, don't get me wrong. I am a sports watcher. If I'm not watching The Sopranos or House, I'm watching one of several sporting events. I will watch a hockey game as long as it has some meaning. Like the Stanley Cup playoffs, even though they go well into June. I'm beginning to like basketball now that the Raptors are respectable, but I'm not sure if I could ever watch a whole basketball game, cover-to-cover. I will also watch European soccer and, now that Toronto has a team, I'll even watch them in a pinch.

My son watches tennis because he plays tennis. I fall asleep watching tennis. I watch the Blue Jays almost every night of the summer. Baseball is terrific because you don't have to watch it so much as listen to it. You can read a book or even do a chore while awaiting exciting plays to take place.

Back in the Blue Jays' glory days, we would take a tiny radio along wherever we went to keep track of our heroes on their way to winning two World Series in a row. I think most of Canada spent the summers of '92 and '93 with portable radios pressed against their ears. At gatherings where baseball watching or listening wasn't allowed, men would take turns slipping out to their car radios to get a Jays up-date from Tom Cheek and Jerry Halworth. Ahh, them was the days.

Poker is another new time-filler for the sports channels. It seems to be becoming the world's largest participatory pastime. It all started when the first Internet poker website offered a newish version of poker called Texas Hold 'em. I won't go into the details because it's basically poker and the details are endless. But since the Internet poker sites have mushroomed into the hundreds, and the players into the millions, we now have loads of TV coverage of dozens of championships which offer million-dollar prizes to the eventual winner. As a result, an influx of very talented Internet players (who have taken on rock star status) are replacing the old-time cowboys who spent their lives dodging from game to game in the backrooms on the various seedier sides of towns.

These rounders are now known as 'Legends'. Doyle Brunson is a Texan of the above description who now makes the rounds tipping his 10 gallon hat to spontaneous applause, and basking in a new-found glory that just didn't exist when he was simply known as a 'gambler'.

And then there's NASCAR. I don't know why, but watching a thundering herd of ultra-high-powered American cars turning left for hours on end, at over 200 mph, accompanied by the twang of several good ole boys from the hills of Tennessee is fun.

Who can resist a colour man who drawls, 'acher ol boy, gonn put a new coata paint on Junior ifn he don't get a mosy on.'

Don't ask.

Trophies

A WHILE BACK, IT occurred to me that something wasn't quite right in the relationship I have with my wife. It wasn't anything obvious but this observation was confirmed by one simple, yet telling, comment.

We had just finished watching a sound bite that featured Donald Trump, his hair, and his beautiful, young wife Melania, when it hit me like a ton of bricks. So I looked at my wife hesitantly and asked the question every middle-aged man fears most.

"Am I a trophy husband?" I stuttered. "Tell me the truth this time."

Tales from

Vinegar Hill

She looked at me, almost as if I were stupid, and replied, "Oh yeah...you're a trophy husband all right."

Just like that, my whole world changed.

Oh, I had always suspected that I was arm candy - I'm not blind. I mean each time I pass a mirror the proof is right there in front of me. Sleek, lithe, rippling with muscles whose hard edges are softened by an inch or two of well-placed fat; what woman could resist? And yet there's so much more to me.

The truly sad part is I am not just the delicious slab of beefcake that everyone sees on the outside. I have a brane too. Oh sure, people often forget that when I speak but I suspect that's only because they are taken aback by my full pouty lips and high exotic cheekbones. I'm not saying that my full luxuriant head of hair isn't an incredibly alluring selling point either; I'm just saying that most people notice my other stunning features first.

Needless to say, this is a difficult realization for a 45-year-old man to make. I mean, this is a time in life when most middle-aged men are starting to look distinguished. And yet, here I am wondering, why was I cursed with such great genes?

You'd never know it looking at me, but I don't even work out. No, this is all natural - every last ounce.

The thing is, I know this Adonis-like physique can't last. In 35 or 40 years, my looks will begin to fade - albeit only slightly. My towering height will be brought low by the unbearable weight of my incredible shoulder muscles. And then what will I be? Just another exceptionally good-looking senior, that's what.

Nurses, young nurses, will argue over who gets to sponge bathe me but not one will want to play checkers, even when I offer them Werther's candy and a story about the good old days - that's the bleak future that awaits yours truly. That's the cross I have to bear.

It's not my fault that my Brad Pittness has overshadowed my vast intellect. But it is something I have to live with each and every day.

Yesterday morning, for instance, my wife approached me, hinting, as always, about having a torrid liaison.

"Would you please get your dirty socks off the couch?" she said in that oblique way of hers. But we both knew what she meant.

"News flash!" I replied. "There's a real live person inside of all this! I have feelings! I'm not just an object! And, by the way, I'm up here!" I concluded, pointing at my eyes.

Seeing the disappointment in her face, I got up, struck an incredibly sexy body-building pose, and winked at her.

"Cramped up?" she asked.

"Not in the least," I answered as I crab-walked seductively out of the room.

"What about those socks?" she asked longingly.

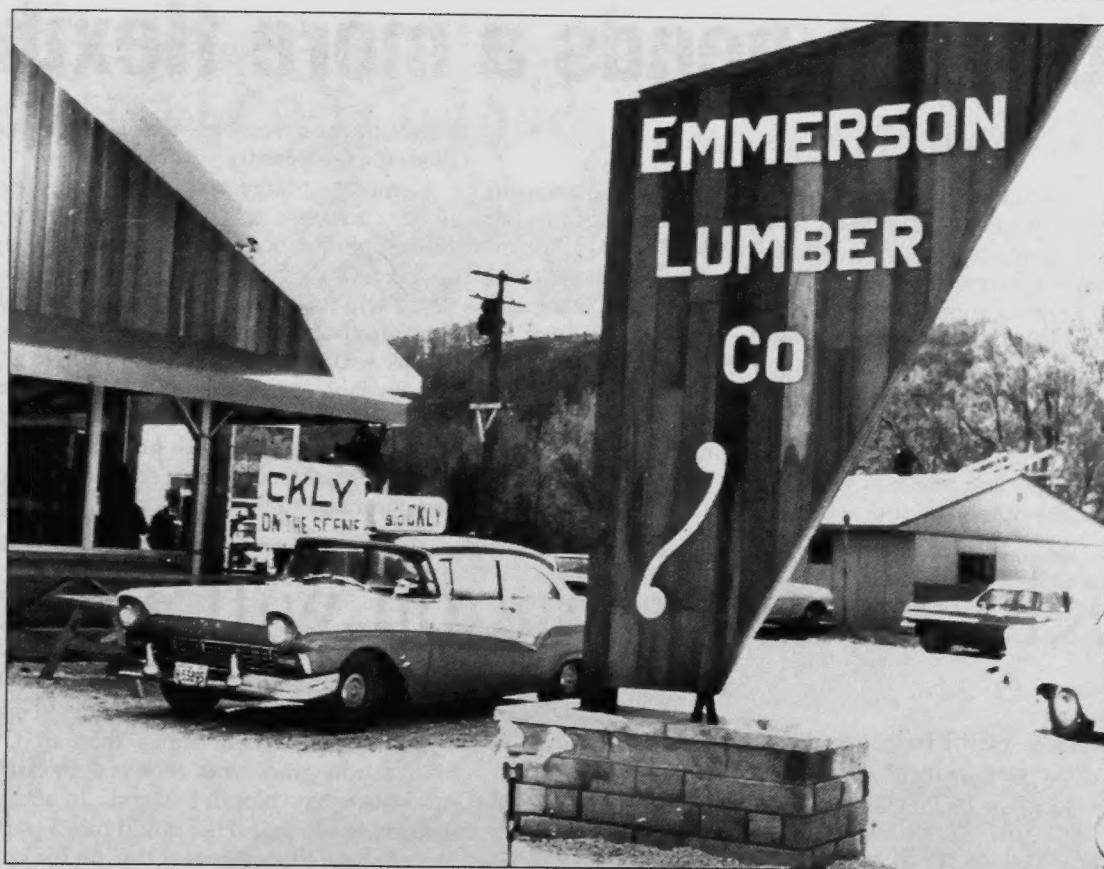

"You had your chance," I winced.

I don't mean to punish her like this, but I do feel I need to get the message across. If I am to get the respect I so rightly deserve, I think people - and you know who you are - need to get past my ravishing good looks and learn about Steve Galea, the person.

Yes, I'm a tall cool drink of water, but I'm also the guy who once accidentally stumbled on the solution to the Rubik's cube. (Peel off the stickers and re-arrange them.) And, while I can't deny that my legs go on forever, that shouldn't diminish my accomplishment in Grade 2 when I received a participant's ribbon in the spelling bee. [See "brane", above.]

All you need do is ask and I'll provide you with plenty of fun facts about me just like these. And maybe then people, people like you, will stop looking at me as merely a trophy husband that adorns my wife's lawn mower.

Hey, I'm so much more. Next time you see me, please try to remember that.

letters to the editor

Norah's Island an exciting partnership

To the Editor:

Thank you for your coverage of the Norah's Island story. We appreciate that the Echo has chosen to provide coverage of the partnership between the Haliburton Highlands Land Trust (HHLT) and the Kennis Lake Cottage Owners Association (KLCOA).

The sense of goodwill between the two organizations and the partnership we are embarking on - with Haliburton Highlands Land Trust (HHLT) as owner of the Island, and KLCOA as partner in its management - left our recent meeting with a tremendous sense of the positive. The response by Kennis families, individuals and businesses to the project has been simply outstanding. The endowment fund is set up such that there is neither a need for, nor has there been evidence of any "chip counting" or comparison.

We see the Norah's Island story as an example of two strong Haliburton organizations, combining to accomplish for the good of all, what neither could fully do on their own. We embark upon this historic project in a spirit of goodwill, co-operation and friendship, backed by a solid management agreement, and overseen by a dedicated and experienced group of volunteers.

We look forward to including the Echo as this story continues to captivate the hearts and minds of Haliburton and beyond.

President, KLCOA

Land Trust clarifies island's history

To the Editor:

I am writing concerning the article entitled "Norah's Island to be loved by all on Kennis Lake" which appeared in the Haliburton Echo on June 5, 2007.

To begin with a number of factual errors were made in the article.

Firstly the ownership of Norah's Island was not transferred to Kennis Lake Cottage Owners Association, as stated in the article. Bruce Carruthers donated the island to the Haliburton Highlands Land Trust (HHLT) and this organization now owns the island. HHLT is a registered charitable organization eligible to receive donations of ecologically significant property, under the Ecological Gifts Program of Environment

Ontario needs a more flexible electoral system

To the Editor:

The environmental crisis of the present demands an improvement in our political system comparable to the enfranchisement of women that WW1 demanded. We are part of a complex world in the province of Ontario and we need a more flexible, less confrontational, more collaborative electoral system. We need the multi-member proportional system recently recommended by the Citizens' Assembly of Ontario.

In this system a ballot will be divided into two halves. On one half you will put an X for the local riding representative you prefer as you have for many past elections. On the other half you will put an X for a party. You will be voting for a member-at-large, in effect a representative of an idea or priority.

Members-at-large will correct the distortions inherent in our current system. If 25 percent of the electors vote on this list or member-at-large side for a party that only wins 20 percent of the seats on the representative side, that party will make up the deficiency by gaining the necessary number of representatives from their list.

This will probably lead to coalition governments but not unstable governments. Germany has used this system since 1948 and has had the same number of elections as Ontario in that period. Moreover, Germany has experienced great social and economic strain with reconstruction and then re-unification.

We have had at least three significant parties in the Ontario legislature since 1919 but the political system has discriminated against the third parties that arose in response to pressing new problems. We can't afford the delay now. We need the full spectrum of political opinion fairly represented in our legislature to find good solutions to our many problems.

Please study the proposals of the Citizens' Assembly. Vote yes to their proposal for MMP (multi-member proportionality) when you vote on Oct 10.

It's time to make democracy better in Ontario.

Jim Milne
West Guilford

KLCOA celebration will actually be held on July 14

Canada. HHLT has entered an agreement with KLCOA for the management of the property, so that it may be protected in its present wilderness state in perpetuity.

Secondly, the initial inspection of the island was not carried out by the Ministry of Natural Resources, as stated, but by a team of local biologists who volunteered their time and expertise. The MNR, through the Ontario Land Trust Alliance, did support the project by giving funds to the Land Trust to cover acquisition costs, such as appraisal of the property and legal expenses.

Thirdly, the article states that an Ontario Trillium Foundation grant was received by HHLT to develop fundraising for Norah's Island. In actual fact the grant was given so that HHLT could hire a part-time Resource Development Coordinator during the coming year. This person (or team of persons) will, for example, develop fundraising strategies for HHLT as a whole and create a training plan for volunteers, so that the Land Trust has greater capacity to respond to the enquiries it receives from landowners across Haliburton interested in long-term preservation of their property.

The article further incorrectly states that a celebration organized by KLCOA is planned for June 14. The correct date is July 14.

We appreciate the efforts of the local press to inform the Haliburton community about this important project. Excellent coverage has appeared in other editions of the Echo and its sister newspapers. However inaccurate coverage such as appeared in the June 5th article does not contribute to general understanding and appreciation of the tremendous commitment of the many volunteers who have worked on this project nor of the individuals who have made generous donations.

Barbecue season is here!

The beautiful summer days have finally arrived. You missed the aroma of grilled meat. The time has come to take out the barbecue. However, before you light it up, you must disassemble all removable parts and clean the inside and outside of the barbecue with soapy water. Scrub the grills with a nylon brush. Use products specifically made for cleaning barbecues or use oven-cleaning products. Scrub the thermometer with a cleaning pad. If necessary, replace the interior plate that serves to gather the grease and the ceramic coals.

Check to see if the burners are rusted and if any of the pipes and connections are loose, cracked, or broken. Pay attention for signs of vermin, insects, or other undesirable squatters. Clean the burners carefully. Also remember to clean the pipes that lead the gas to the front burner controls because it is a popular place for spider webs and other little cocoons, which could affect the flow of gas to the burners, resulting in poor performance and creating a fire risk at the controls. To know if the gas is flowing properly to a burner, check the flame. If it is yellowish and is slow to start, it could be that the burner tubes are partially obstructed. If so, use a cleaning product designed for burner tubes. Replace a burner if its performance has diminished.

If you don't own a barbecue, a visit to the specialty stores will have you salivating. Start by evaluating your needs, taking into account the space available, your eating habits, the frequency of use, the number of people you are cooking for, and your budget. Choose the model (charcoal, gas, electric, wood), the size, the number and type of burners, the cooking power, the cooking surface, and the type of cooking grills that will best suit your requirements.

Always a great shopping experience

Give your property a rustic look! Rustic arrangements ally plants and accessories. In a sunny area, wild flowers growing freely provide a light and open atmosphere. In the underbrush and shady areas, ferns and wild ginger offer a feeling of mystery and untouched nature.

A rustic garden is inspired by the landscape that surrounds it, whether it is the large expanses of the country or the proximity of the city. For one, it offers a pergola, a sleigh, and a barrel; for the other, it displays natural stones, a statue, and a bench. For each, it is a source of visual beauty and appeal.

By recycling your antiques, you can create a quasi-poetic ambiance. Iron and wood unite to create the illusion of timelessness. Old garden tools, picket fences, old bicycles, basins, and railings, add warmth to a rustic garden and give the impression that they have always been there.

If your property has enough space, nothing is more charming than transforming an antique into a floral work of art.

Elements of country life, made of wood, stone, and iron, are particularly desirable. With time, they have acquired a distinctive tint, texture, and softness. Moss has already settled in and the patina of time has done its work.

To complete the rustic arrangement, you can plant perennials that you will allow to grow freely, giving them some basic care so they can thrive in good health. You can also choose annuals, which you will plant in abundance.

Keep your clippings

Each summer, homeowners across the country discard a valuable resource that can help their lawns in a number of ways. Under the false impression that grass clippings cause thatch, many homeowners discard their clippings in garbage bags they tote away. However, the best thing to do with clippings is to allow them to fall back to the turf. When allowing clippings to fall back, up to 25 percent of the fertilizer nutrients are returned to the turf. Grass clippings are 85 to 90 percent water and nutrients, including nitrogen, phosphorous and potassium. For clippings to be effective, mowing the lawn regularly and not letting the grass get too high is essential. A good tool to use is a mulching mower, which boasts unique decks and blades that actually suspend clippings, allowing them to be cut into small pieces, perfect for falling back to the turf. Mulching mowers, however, are not effective in tall or wet grass, giving another reason to keep grass from getting too tall.

Mill Reserve booklet a celebration of village's founders

MARTHA PERKINS

Editor

The 70 people gathered on the shores of the Drag River one cold December morning in 1864 knew how important this moment was, not only for their own chances of prosperity in this struggling collection of ramshackle log cabins called Haliburton, but for the very survival of the village itself.

Without a mill, all the logs that were hewn from the forests surrounding Head Lake had to be cut by hand. The work was hard and time-consuming. This impediment to development had to be overcome. There was no way the Canadian Land and Emigration Company was going to attract new settlers to the area if it was so hard to build a house.

And so a great cheer went up when the water started flowing over the dam to power the new mill, which could cut 3,000 board feet of lumber a day. A village was born.

In the luncheon celebration that followed, the Peterborough Review reporter wrote, "It was worthy of note that no intoxicating drinks were consumed."

The mood would be sober enough over the next few years. Mill or not, the village never did quite live up to its billing as an immigrants' Mecca. Even the land company, which tried to sell the dream of a farmer's paradise in an area where the most abundant crop was rock, went bust. Were it not for the timber rights that were sold as part of the bankruptcy, it's unlikely the village would exist today.

In 2007, it's all too easy to forget the role that lumbering played in our history. With the area's beautiful lakes and thousands of cottages, many people dream of being able to afford a little chunk of the Haliburton Highlands.

But Kim Emmerson remembers. Every day that he goes to work he has all the reminders he needs to know that without lumber, and the means to produce and sell it, he would not be able to enjoy the Haliburton lifestyle he loves so much.

Seventy years ago next month, his father, Bill Emmerson, was one of two entrepreneurs who founded Emmerson Lumber. Bill Emmerson created his new business in a corner of what was left of his father-in-law's mill. W.O. Bailey, like others before him, had strived to operate a mill on the shores of the Drag River.

Mr. Gary Brohman - Principal

Mills powered the development of Haliburton village

The setting was ideal: the river provided the energy to power the mill, first by turning the mill's water wheel, then by flowing through a turbine that created electricity. As well, the river linked the mill to the forests in the northeast. Logs could be floated or winched across Drag Lake and down the river to the mill, which could then load the lumber onto the train that waited a short distance away where the Drag River emptied into Head Lake.

Apart from the dam just below Pine Street, most signs of the mill are gone. (The original mill burnt down in 1892.) But Emmerson Lumber has flourished, thanks in part to the forests' ability to attract people who want to enjoy this natural refuge. To build a cottage you need wood – and pipes, and sinks, and kitchen cabinets, and electrical supplies. Emmerson Lumber has evolved into a business that not only supplies all the construction materials but can design the building itself.

To celebrate the business's history, Kim Emmerson decided to share his fascination with his history. He has compiled a 32-page booklet called The Mill Reserve: A Part of Haliburton History. It is included, for free, in today's Echo and will also be available at the store on the corner of Pine Avenue and Victoria Street.

Oddly enough, only a few pages are devoted to the business itself. Emmerson focuses instead on the property, part of a square block of land reserved for the development of a saw and grist mill on the village's original maps. It seems that Kim Emmerson's modest disposition has carried through in the booklet.

"Most people know about recent history," he says of why he concentrated on the property's history, rather than the business's. "They don't know about the older history."

W.O. Bailey, Kim Emmerson's maternal grandfather, was one of the Haliburton entrepreneurs who built a mill on the Mill Reserve property. This one was in operation from 1945-1959. Emmerson Lumber was started at the front portion of the W.O. Bailey operation.

He went through local history books to find references to the property – Early Days in Haliburton by Harley Cummings (from which the description of the opening of the mill, above, was taken), In Quest of Yesterday by Nila Reynolds, Fragments of a Dream by Leopoldina Dobrzensky and Haliburton Village 1864 – 1964 by Ron Curry and the Rotary Club of Haliburton. His late uncle, Merrill Bailey, had also written about his father, W.O., and students at Haliburton Highlands Secondary School had written an article on Lumbering in Haliburton County in 1974. Present-day recollections and assistance were provided by David Bishop and the Haliburton Highlands Museum.

Kim Emmerson has always been fascinated by history and the more he dug into the records of the mill reserve, the more intrigued he became.

Those 70 people who gathered for the mill opening in 1864, for instance, must have come from far and wide. The village in those days couldn't support such a "large" population and the mill was vital if the town was to grow to match their dreams.

"The mill gave them a sense of hope," Emmerson said.

And hope was needed. Haliburton provided horrible farming. Built on the edge of the Canadian Shield, the village's soil was poorly suited to agriculture. Farming was such a tough go that when the train – the next sign of hope in the village – made its way to Haliburton, more people used it to leave the area than to settle here.

That's why Emmerson's book is such a tribute to those who not only stayed, but who believed enough in the area to establish businesses. The Mill Reserve, by its very nature, tells the story of mills that were built and shut down (if they didn't burn first), of plans for prosperity that led to disappointment. But Emmerson Lumber was created when the village was embracing its new incarnation as a "tourist town" in the midst of "cottage country." Bill Emmerson didn't let the failures of the past cloud his own hopes for the future, and he passed on his faith to his son, Kim, who has now welcomed his son, Ryan, to the business.

In celebrating Emmerson Lumber's 50th anniversary, Kim Emmerson has found a way of acknowledging the hard work and perseverance of all those who made a go of this property along the Drag River. The booklet is a way of making the anniversary a continuum of history, not just a stopping place: part of the past, part of the present, and part of the future.

Check time, location of Blood Donor clinic

MARTHA PERKINS

Editor

Richard Van Nood knows how easy it can be to save a life.

You lie down, roll up your sleeve and let the Canadian Blood Services take some of your blood.

As someone who has participated in 36 blood donor clinics, Van Nood wanted to encourage others to do the same. He issued a challenge to his fellow Rotarians and, as a result, the Rotary Club of Haliburton has recently become Partners for Life with the agency that collects and distributes blood products throughout Canada.

Haliburton Rotarians are now committed, as a group, to donating blood. They'll be able to show their commitment on June 25 when the next blood donor clinic is held in Haliburton.

"What an easy thing this is to do," says Van Nood, the day after Linda Mather, the local clinic recruitment co-ordinator for Canadian Blood Services presented the club with a certificate of registration as Partners for Life.

When he talks to other people about donating blood, most cite their fear or dislike of needles as their main reason for not taking part.

Van Nood says that while there is brief pain – "it's a small prick in the arm and then it's over" – most people willingly expose themselves to more uncomfortable situations all the time and think nothing of it.

"I play men's league hockey," he says. "I don't like taking a slapshot to the knee but I keep going back week after week."

Mather welcomes the Rotary Club's commitment, especially as summer approaches and the need for blood increases. She says, "We need more civically-motivated individuals to donate blood regularly so hospital patients can continue to rely on a constant supply for patients."

One donation of blood can save up to three lives.

The Haliburton clinic on June 25 is at the Legion. You can book an appointment by calling 1-888-2-DONATE or you can drop by the Legion from noon to six o'clock.

Linda Mather of Canadian Blood Services and local volunteer convenor Cecilia Scott are pleased to welcome Haliburton Rotary President Robert denBoer and Rotarian Richard Van Nood as Partners for Life. The Haliburton Rotary Club members have committed themselves to donating blood on a regular basis.

Pampered Chef delights crowds at Maple Lake Church

community news

west guilford

Eleanor Cooper

The Pampered Chef, whose display was part of the Home Show a week ago, entertained 21 people at a demonstration of wares and cookery at Maple Lake United Church on June 5. Pizza and a rich dessert were the tempting foods offered. Sales were such that the Church was able, through their commission, to help defray the cost of shingling the roof of the church.

Doreen and Don Hatt of Truro, Nova Scotia, camped across the road from us last weekend. This is an annual trip which this time included a side trip to the bakery in Wilberforce before their return journey.

Ans Klomp, who worked in the '70s at Kinark group home in this area, is a friend of Louise Vanden Hoogen. Ans' home is in Holland but she was able to work in a few days with Louise and Betsie Kanter before her return, and before Betsie moved to Extensicare in Uxbridge, Ont., the area in which Nicole (Kanter's) and Don Foster live with their boys, Ryan and Adam.

Community Care newsletter, summer edition arrived in our mailbox this week. Much helpful information is included, some of which is:

1) help is available by calling 457-2941 for housework, for yard work, for transportation to medical appointments.

2) home-cooked meals are served at Minden's Dominion Hotel on the 3rd Tuesday of every month ($8.50), at Win Yeung's Restaurant every other Wednesday $8, at the Legion in Wilberforce ($10) and seasonally at "The Cookhouse", Haliburton Forest and Wildlife Reserve, by calling 754-1323.

3) Government forms and information about health issues are available at Community Care's resource centre.

A delightful Chamber Music Recital entertained at the Northern Lights Pavilion on June 6. Two of the twenty-three musicians, Erin & Jennifer Ellison, returned to their high school to join the Senior Music Students, Erin on trumpet and Jennifer on clarinet.

Justin Dunning and Devan McConnell were the two Guilford musicians, Justin on guitar, then flute, and Devan on trumpet. The quality of playing was excellent, and the students presented themselves with obvious poise and enjoyment.

Join men as they denounce violence against women

JESSICA YOUNG

Staff Reporter

On Saturday June 23 between 10 a.m. to 2 p.m., there will be an unusually high number of men on main streets across the county. Groups of male volunteers will be in downtown Minden, Haliburton, Wilberforce, Eagle Lake and Carnarvon, helping to raise money for the YWCA Haliburton Emergency Rural SafeSpace (HERS).

Men will be standing outside local businesses or strolling around town. Donate and receive a tag, pin it, and wear it knowing that your money goes towards the prevention of violence against women and their families.

The organization hosts a variety of services and programs which include counselling, assistance with housing, court support, and transportation and emergency services for women and children.

Interested male volunteers can call Daisy Downs at 286-1942 or Bob McKay at 754-4556.

Studio forges the way in Wilberforce

community news

wilberforce

Hilda Clark

448-2018

Forges and blacksmithing are news - and memories. A slight indentation in the ground is all that is left of the "old house" on the "upper place" where my dad Walter Clark had his simple forge.

As a child it was exciting to watch and occasionally be allowed to pull the handle on the big bellows and see the charcoal fan into glowing coals. It was awesome to watch a piece of metal turn red in the coals, then taken in long tongs to the bench, often into a vise, where it was worked before it cooled. It would be bent and hammered into the required shape. What fun to hear and see the steam hiss and rise when the finished piece was plunged into a bucket of spring water to cool.

For many projects, especially getting the horses shod, my dad usually headed off with a team to the shop operated by Albert Saunders down by Wilbermere Lake. The winter shoes were taken off in spring and replaced in the fall. It always amazed me as a child that the nails that held the shoes on didn't hurt the horses. It was the skilled blacksmith who knew how to do this properly. Albert's shop is now a summer cottage. And the old Clark forge is just a precious childhood memory.

But the news is that there is a new forge in Wilberforce just a little way south of where Albert's was located. Tracey Lee Green and Daryl Sands are opening the Beverly Forge as a part of their Nostalgic Art Studios this coming weekend. They welcome visitors to an open house on Saturday, June 16 from 12 noon to 4 p.m. It's on Saunders Road in the south part of Wilberforce. (Mailing address is RR1 Tory Hill.) This welcome new creative arts business is a wonderful addition to this community. All the best in your endeavours Tracey, Daryl and family.

Though it is several weeks away the organizers of the Canada Day ceremonies would like it known that there is a time change this year. Things will begin at 2 p.m. Sunday, July 1 at the Wilberforce Red Cross Outpost Historic House. After flag raising and singing of O Canada etc the celebrations will continue with refreshments on the back lawn. There will be icecream and birthday cake to celebrate Canada's 140 years. See you there.

Friends of Rex Penfold were sorry to hear of his death on May 27, 2007. Rex died in hospital in Grimsby at the age of 83. Rex came to live in Wilberforce upon retirement and enjoyed his time here. In recent years he had spent more time away from the area especially in the winter. A service was held in the Monk Funeral Chapel in Minden and Rex was laid to rest in the Wilberforce cemetery. Condolences are extended to his family and friends.

The recent Harcourt Chapel news bulletin indicates that a good variety of special speakers are scheduled for their 7 p.m. Sunday services. All are welcome for those and other services and activities. For more information call 448-2273.

Editor's note: Val Smith is the trustee for Haliburton County on the Trillium Lakelands District School Board.

The three words optimism, renewal and creativity not only described the theme for the Ontario Public School Boards' Association 19th Annual General Meeting this past weekend but are very appropriate words to describe the conference's closing speaker Alvin Law.

Alvin was born without arms because his mother took thalidomide during her pregnancy. In the early 1960s the prescription drug to treat morning sickness caused deformities in thousands of newborn babies and in many cases death.

Alvin is a powerful narrator who through his own life experiences allows you to enter into his life and feel both the pain and elation he has endured. Alvin grew up in a family where he was taught that he could be whatever he wanted to be, that anything was possible and there is no such word as can't. Alvin showed us that obstacles can be overcome with the right attitude.

Through remarkable perseverance, Alvin learned how to play a number of musical instruments including piano, drums and trombone. He learned how to drive a car, comb his hair and much more by using his feet. His speech was intended to not only inspire us but to forth challenge educators and parents as well. He challenged us to allow children to make mistakes and fail if necessary. His parents insisted that he attend regular elementary and high schools, even though handicapped children were placed in institutions or special education programs carried out in segregated classrooms in the sixties. He indicated he faced many challenges and failures that he had to overcome through perseverance. However, this was the basis of his success.

His message was to not treat children like china as their egos are not as fragile as we think and they will not break. Just as his parents insisted that there is no such word as can't we should encourage our children to appreciate challenges and learn to overcome obstacles. Depth of character can be gained by turning mistakes and failures into success.

I found his message was upbeat and very thought-provoking. I would say this is a very worthwhile challenge for parents, grandparents and educators to certainly give some very serious thought to.

Just as bacon and eggs go together so do warm summer days and baseball. July is quickly approaching and so is Harcourt's 9th Annual Three-Pitch Tournament to be held July 6, 7 and 8. We have a very special band playing for the baseball tournament dance on July 7. The Kent Boys are a band with family connections to Benoir Lake, Paudash and Carnarvon. Poor Pelly, Bradleyboy and "Choo Choo" Clarky are the threesome that comprise the band. They draw inspiration from bluegrass to folk to country and punk. It's their electric vibe in addition to their incredible talent that has grabbed the attention of music professionals and audiences alike. The threesome recently signed with a record company and just completed a cross-Canada tour to promote their latest CD.

The Kent Boys keep it simple with unique instruments such as the washtub bass, suitcase kick-drum and wash-tub snare. Three-part harmonies combined with foot-stomping rhythms and honest lyrics have audiences dancing from beginning to end.

The Kent Boys have shared the stage with such acts as B.A. Johnston, Elliott Brood, The Sadies and Washboard Hank. They can be seen everywhere from town halls, festivals and clubs, most notably playing at the Havelock Jamboree in 2006. Their music has also been featured on Haliburton's, Canoe 100.9 FM. The Kent boys will be playing at the Harcourt Community Centre on July 7th during the annual Harcourt Three-Pitch Tournament on Saturday evening, July 7th. Come out and meet this lofty band and enjoy some groovy sounds.

Picnic in the park

It was such a beautiful day on Friday that the Riverside Montessori School decided to have a picnic lunch in Head Lake Park. After sitting quietly in the park to enjoy their meal, the children were anxious to enjoy the playground facilities. Young Matthew Wilson, whose mother Andrea is one of the owners of Haliburton school, discovered that swings might be old-fashioned but they're just as fun today as they were decades ago.

Aaliyah and Jamie Holden talk about play days in the quiet solitude of a summer afternoon.

Tap into drinking water safety

In the wake of province-wide testing for lead in drinking water, local health officials are recommending ways for homeowners in this area to address potential concerns.

The Haliburton, Kawartha, Pine Ridge District Health Unit has received test results for lead in drinking water from 20 homes in Lindsay. Results show that lead levels in two of the homes were above the provincial standard of 10 parts per billion.

Lindsay's municipal water system was one of 36 across Ontario, and the only one within the HKPR district, ordered by the Ontario government to conduct random testing on houses with lead service pipes. On June 7, the Ontario government released test results from all 36 communities and announced a province-wide action plan to address concerns about lead in drinking water.

Ontario's plan includes several aspects. Starting immediately, schools and daycares must test for lead annually, and for any of these facilities built before 1990, must flush their water systems daily. Municipalities are also required to educate people about lead in water, regularly sample for lead in a certain number of homes, report results to the homeowner and take corrective action if lead levels are above provincial standards. There are other measures, the details of which still need to be finalized.

Locally, even though the test results from Lindsay may be a "snapshot in one community," Anne Alexander, the health unit's director of environmental health, notes they also serve as a reminder that there may be other homes in Northumberland County, Haliburton County and the City of Kawartha Lakes that may have elevated lead levels in drinking water. Lead may enter the drinking water of some older homes as a result of leaching from lead service connections, lead pipes and solder in the plumbing system. Homes built prior to 1952 may have such lines.

Long-term lead exposure at elevated levels can pose the greatest health risk to pregnant women and children under six years of age. That is why the Health Unit recommends, as a precautionary measure, that pregnant women and children under the age of six who live in homes suspected of having lead lines should drink an alternative source of water. This can include drinking bottled water or using an approved filter attached to the tap, or an approved water-pitcher filtration system that meet the National Sanitation Foundation International Standards. This recommendation is especially important for infants whose formula is prepared by adding tap water to liquid concentrate or powder.

In general, if area residents suspect or know they have lead pipes in their homes, the Health Unit advises:

- Running the water from the drinking water tap if it has been sitting in the pipes for six hours or more. This will "flush" or remove the standing water before you drink or use it for preparing food. You should run the cold drinking water tap at medium flow for five minutes. Alternately, you can take a shower or run a large appliance such as a washing machine or dishwasher, then run the cold water tap at medium flow for an additional two minutes.

- Using cold, flushed water for drinking and preparing food. Water from the hot water tap should not be consumed as it may contain more lead.

- Removing aerators on occasion from taps and flushing out any accumulated debris.

Alexander cautions that heating or boiling drinking water will not remove lead, and in fact, could increase the concentration of it.

More information about lead in drinking water is available at the Health

Unit's web site at www.hkpr.on.ca under 'What's New.'

Help sow the seeds of community garden

Community Garden in Haliburton seeks volunteers

Volunteers are being sought to help put down roots at a community garden project in the area.

The Haliburton, Kawartha, Pine Ridge District Health Unit, Health for Life and other partners are seeking assistance this summer for the community garden. Now in its fourth year, the garden is located beside the lower parking lot of the Haliburton Highlands Health Services site in Haliburton Village.

Volunteers are needed to help tend and harvest the garden. As in past years, all produce grown in the garden will be donated to the Haliburton 4Cs Food Bank for use by its clients.

"Here we grow again, literally," says Megan Marchant, a Public Health Food Worker with the HKPR District Health Unit. "For people who like gardening, this is a great way to get active outdoors and meet some new friends, all the while helping to feed people in our community."

To help or find out more information about the community garden, individuals can call the Health Unit at (705) 457-1391, ext. 246.
